

Mata o Muna 4: Pulepulega o te Fenua	Chapter 4: Governance of the Island
Te Pulefenua me ko te Alikī o Nanumea ko te hui filifilia i mea tau te tulāfono (o te fenua) pelā hoki a ia ko te hui fakamātea ki luga i tulaga pulepule kae mauluga o te fenua. Te tulaga e noho i ai a ia he tulaga mauluga 'kī i luga i faifaiga faka Nanumea, kae koa iloa hoki me ko faifaiga konei e hē tūmau, e mafuli kae e olo ki mua.	The Pulefenua or Alikī of Nanumea serves as the representative of the Nanumean community, both legally and in a richly symbolic sense. While the position he occupies is a highly traditional one, these traditions have never been static. The events and personalities of the times have always helped to shape and define the role.
Te fakamoemoega o te mataupu tenei ke avatu he ata lauefa kae katoatoa o te vaegā a pulepulega o te fenua ko Nanumea i te faitu faka faifaga, faka mālō. E muamua atu i te fakamatalaga o te faitu faka tulāfono mo te tāua o galuega 'fai a te pulefenua i po nei.	The goal of this chapter is to provide a comprehensive picture of Nanumea's traditional governmental institutions. It begins by describing the legal and symbolic importance of the Pulefenua's role today.
Tāua mo lloga o te Pulefenua	The Importance of the Pulefenua/Alikī
Te tāua o 'pulepulega faka faifaiga faka te fenua' e fakamatalagina i loto i te Fakavae o Tuvalu, fakatahi mo fakanohoga kolā ko takitaki faka fenua ke galue fakatahi mo te mālō o te aso kae fakatau āva lāua i te lā vā ailoa i te faiga o a lā haga mo a lā fuafuaga.	The importance of 'traditional authorities' such as the Pulefenua is encoded in the Constitution of Tuvalu, together with the provision that these local leaders and the central government will cooperate together with mutual respect.
I Nanumea, a te Falekaupule ko te Āhiga, a lātou konei ko te Tokofitu (takitokotahi mai maga e fitu o telega aliki), mo te Pulefenua me ko te Alikī lā i ai. Te tiute fai o te Falekaupule ko te 'fakatūmauga o te fīlemu mo te pulepulega 'lei pelā hoki mo te atiakega o te fenua.'	In Nanumea, the Falekaupule includes the āhiga, the seven chiefly descent groups (Tokofitu or maga o aliki), and the Pulefenua or Alikī. The responsibility of the Falekaupule is to 'maintain order and good governance and promote development within the area of its authority.'
Ni ā tonu ailoa a pologa mo mālosi faka fenua o te pulefenua? A ia ko te pule mo te tahi o te fenua kātoa. Ko tena sainaga e manakogina ke faka'malu ki ai a ikuga a fono katoa a te fenua e fai. A te 'lei mo te māhei o te fenua ko te pulefenua e tātau o pula kae fai he ana fakamatalaga ki ai.	What exactly are the customary responsibilities and powers of the Pulefenua? First of all, he is the leader and the source of unity for the whole island. His signature is required to confirm any resolution made by the island. He must devote himself to planning what will benefit the community.
Molimau mai Tuhituhiga Mua mo Fakatelega Māhāni o te Fenua	Evidence from Historic Documents about Traditional Political Structure
Mai i tala mua o faifaiga māhāni o Nanumea, e fakaali mai i ai i tiute 'fai o te pulefenua e hē tūmau kae mafuilufuli tele ailoa. I te okomaiga o tagata halahala fenua mai Eulopa, faifeau, tāgata faka'tau koloa mo tāgata galulue o te mālō ki uta i Nanumea i te 19 Senitenali, a lātou ni hokotaki mo te mālō o te aso.	Nanumean traditional history overwhelmingly shows that the role of the Pulefenua has always been dynamic and changing through time. When European explorers, missionaries, traders and government officials arrived at Nanumea in the 19th century, they interacted with the government of the day.
Te fakamatalaga muamua kae tāua 'kī ailoa o pulepulega faka Nanumea ni tuhigina e te kāpeni 'fai ika tafolā e igoa kia Henry Pease. Henry Pease ni noho i uta i te fenua e fakatautau ki te tolu ona pō i te tauhaga e 1853. Ni fakamatalagina e Pease me i te tupu koa noho pelā me koa 'fuatolu ma lima (35) tauhaga o tona olaga.'	The first mention of Nanumea's chieftainship is the richly descriptive account made by whaling captain Henry Pease. He spent three days ashore in 1853 and met repeatedly with 'the king and his chiefs.' Pease described the king as 'about 35 years old.'
Ko Pease ni talitonu me ni ana laveagina he tokotahi e pule ni fai pelā me he tukumuna. I te tauhaga e 1866, ni oko atu i ai he vaka fakatau koloa ni togigina e te kau lotu LMS ke momoli atu i ai te faifeau/misionale ko	Whereas Pease believed that he had seen a single leader acting as spokesman, some later visitors presented a different picture. In 1866, missionary A.W. Murray was brought to Nanumea in the first attempt to

A.W. Murray ki Nanumea. Hē ni manuia a te taumafaiga tenā a Murray, kae a ia ni mafai o maua he ana avanoaga toetoe o hepaki mo te 'Pule mo tino takitaki o te fenua.'	establish a mission station there. Murray was not successful in that effort but was able to meet briefly with 'the chief and principal people.'
A te palagi ake ni oko atu ki Nanumea, ko te misionale S.J. Whitmee i te tauhaga e 1870, ni fakamatala e ia me i tana pula e pelā e tokolua 'tupu' me ni aliki. E fai mai hoki a Whitmee me e 'tokolua tupu e papau lā tulaga' i Nanumea, kae e heke a ona fakamatala mai i tūlaga o pulepulega i fenua ake o Tuvalu.	The next foreign visitor, missionary S. J. Whitmee in 1870, was also left with the impression that there were two 'kings' or high chiefs. Whitmee later contrasted what he believed the Nanumean situation to be ('two kings on equal footing') with the forms of government he encountered in the other Tuvalu islands.
E hē motuhia e mafai ailoa o maua he fakamatalaga mai iluga i fakamatalaga kolā pelā koa faka iloagina tonu pelā me e lua telega/maga/gafa e fai fakatahi te lā haga/pologa i te fakatelega ki te pulega o te fenua. A tino e tavivili mai me e tokotahi ailoa a te hui mai i te maga e tahi e hopo i he taimi — a maga konei e lua e tatau o 'fakaholo' ki luga i te papa.	Perhaps an explanation can be found in the widely accepted principle that two chiefly lineages traditionally share responsibility for providing the ruling chief. People say that while only one maga's representative reigns at a given time, these two lines should ideally 'go in turn,' fakaholo, in providing a chief.
Makohuga ni Fai e te Mālō Faka Kolone	Colonial Interference with Traditional Leadership Institutions
A tala mua o faifaiga faka Nanumea ni fakamatala mai a te mauaga mo te nohoakiga muamua ailoa o te fenua, e fakaali mai hoki te pulepulega faka Nanumea ni fakatokagina faka fia taimi mai tua ifo o te okomaiga o Tefolaha. A te ikuga fakautu ko te pulepulega faka fenua ni toe itiiti ailoa kae 'mulu faka'magina i loto ailoa o te sentenali e tahi.	The traditional history shows that Nanumea's chieftainship was transformed or reorganized several times after Tefolaha's arrival. Though these internal changes were important, they seem relatively minor compared to the massive disruptions brought about by a new religion and an imposed colonial government in the late 19th century.
Pokotiaga mai Misionale mo Faifeau	Influences from Missionaries and Pastors
A tino Nanumea ni faka maina e lātou me ia lātou e hē fiafia ki he fakamafuliga i te olotou talitonuga me ko olotou nohonohoga. A Lie, te toeaina matuatua kae ko te pule mauluga, ni tavili tonu ailoa ki te faifeau penei: 'Aku e fia ailoa o tapuaki ki atua ni māhane aku o tapuaki ki ai.'	Nanumeans made it very clear that they desired no change in their belief system or way of life. Lie, the elderly high chief, directly told the missionary: 'I wish to worship the gods I have always worshipped.'
Fakamuli atu, ko he vaega 'ta kolekolega' ailoa e heke telā ni mafai i ai o 'fakamau' e lātou tino Nanumea. A te kāpeni ko John Moresby, i te tauhaga 1872, ni fakamatala e ia pelā me i tino Nanumea ni 'ni tino e tapuaki ki tiapolo.' A ia ni 'fai ki ni lua tino ke olo ki tai i te vaka, o fana ni polo-fana ko te mea ke olotou iloa a te mālosi o te tagata tea (papalagi).'	Ultimately, it was a very different type of persuasion which succeeded. Captain John Moresby, in command of H.M.S. Basilisk, visited Nanumea in July 1872. He characterized Nanumeans as 'all Devil worshippers' and 'persuaded some to come on board, and fired a few shots to give them an idea of the white man's power.' Less than six months later, Nanumeans accepted their first missionary.
A tino i pō nei e fai mai me i te 'malu faka faifaiga o te aliki-hopo e fakavae ailoa mai i luga i tena papa. Te 'malu o te pule e fakamātea mai i mea e tolu konei: te pule (te saolotoga ke pule), te fakamataku (fakamataku, olo tahi mo te fakaava), mo te kainaga (e fakatoka mai e te fenua). I konei ni iku ailoa ki te loloto o te fenua ke taliagina a te faiākoga Kelisiano.	People today say that the traditional 'malu of the reigning aliki was based on his papa. The chief's 'malu was expressed through three inter-related components: te pule (right to rule), te fakamataku (reverence/awe/fear), and te kainaga (provisioning by the community). The acceptance of the pastor as the new religious leader required change in the role of the aliki.

I te tauhaga e 1892 koa hahae ake a fififiga i te vahia o te aliki o Nanumea mo te faifeau, ni tutupu mai tua o te taimi ni fakatu i ai a te pulega a Peletania. Te aliki o te taimi tenei ko Vaetolo. I ana fakamatalaga, ni tavili tonu ailoa ki te faifeau penei: 'I te po 16 o te mahina o Setema, 1892 ni fano i ai aku ki te fale o te faiākoga Samoa... kae ni fakaali mai a te hē āva o ona o tutuli aku te Tupu ke fano ki ātea ki toku fale.'

Overt conflict between Nanumea's aliki and pastor finally developed in 1892. As Vaetolo's complaint stated: 'On the 16th September, 1892 I went to the house of the Samoan teacher... The Samoan informed me that he the Samoan was the Ruler of the Land, and rudely drove me the King away to my own house.'

Pokotiaga mai te Mālō faka Kolone

Influences from the Colonial Government

Te Tulāfono Totino Fakafenua o Elise ni faitegina a Peletania i te tauhaga e 1894. A tulāfono tenei e fakatino tonu ailoa ki te fakatulagaga o mālō o fenua kae ni fakatoka hoki ailoa ū nā e sefulu valu tulāfono. Iluga i fenua taki tahi, te 'Aliko Hopo' tana pologa ailoa ke pula ki te 'lei mo te tokaga malie o te fenua.

The Native Laws of the Ellice Islands were formulated by the British in 1894. These specified the structure of island government and set out eighteen laws. On each island, 'the High Chief' was made responsible for the good order of the community and was to preside at monthly meetings of a council of elders.

I te tauhaga 1917 te toe iloilogaga mo te toe tuhiga o te tulāfono o Tuvalu ni faka'malu a ia a tulāfono kolā koa leva hoki ailoa ni fakaogā tele: te fāmasino pelā me ko ia ailoa te tino mauluga 'kī i loto i te mālō o fenua. I te uiga o fakamafuliga mālosi 'kī telā ki te tukuifoga o te aliki pelā he ata takitaki, ni tuhigina e Dickson: 'A te tulaga o te Pule Mauluga (aliki) pelā koa tai galo atu.'

In 1917, the revised Laws formalized what had already become accepted practice: the Magistrate was legally the highest official in local government. Regarding the crucial change which demoted the aliki to a figurehead status, Dickson wrote: 'The position of High Chief is practically extinct, and I have therefore omitted [Rule] 1.'

I te tauhaga e 1966, a te tulāfono e a te mālō fou o te fenua ni fakahēai e ia a te tulaga o te Pule Kaubure kae ni fakatū ake e ia te vaega mālō faka fenua ko te fonopule o te fenua. E fakamatalagina e tino Nanumea pelā me i te tulāfono fou tenei i tona uiga e fai pelā me i te tulaga aliki faka tū mo faifaiga koa faka hē ai ailoa.

In 1966, a new local government ordinance abolished the Chief Kaubure position and instituted the Island Council form of local government. Nanumeans interpreted the new Ordinance to mean that their traditional Aliko position could no longer exist, since no actual provision for the position of High Chief was included.

I te tauhaga e 1985 ni fai a te fono i uta i te āhiga ni fakapātino i ai a te toe fakanohoga o te tulaga pulefenua (aliki) o Nanumea. Hē ni leva mai tua ifo kae fakahopo a Mita lakopo ki te papa. A te tulaga fou o te tukumuna ni fakatū ake hoki i te taimi tenei.

In 1985, an āhiga meeting officially re-established Nanumea's Pulefenua/Aliko position and Mita was shortly after installed in that office. The new position of Speaker, Tukumuna, was also established at that time.

Galuega mo Iloga o te Pulefenua

The Role and Expectations of the High Chief

A te pulefenua e tatau ailoa a ia o galue mo te lelei mo te manuia o te fenua. Ke aofaga ki mea kolā e manuia i ai a te fenua. Ke tausi ana amioga ke gali ke tau tonu mo tona tofi. Mai i te amioga lelei o te pulefenua koa mafai ailoa o maua te maumea mai i te tai, pelā hoki te uluniu mo te laukele o te fenua.

The High Chief must continually work for the well-being and good fortune of the community. His leadership must benefit the community. He must ensure that his behaviour is appropriate to his position. The behavior of the High Chief influences the productivity of the ocean and reefs, as well as that of the coconuts and other produce of the land.

Iloga mo uiga e tatau o ola i ai a te pulefenua

Restrictions which bind the High Chief

- Ke mo ā e hoi me koa fakafungahele
- Ke hē kau i loto i lukulukuga a fakapotopotoga foiliki
- E tatau o teuteu fakalei (tu'mā) i taimi katoa e fano i ai a ia ki lukuga a te fenua

- He must not show favoritism
- He must not participate in activities of small groups
- He should be clean and presentable when he goes to an island function

• Ke hē ai ni ana mea e puke tele i ona lima, me fafa/kopi e ia he tamaliki manafai e haele a ia i te auala	• He should not carry anything in his hands, nor carry a child in his arms while walking on the road
• Ke hē fai tauhoa, kae ke hē mata fāfine	• He shouldn't make friends, or stare at women
• E tapu i te fano ki te talo, te kake, fai ika, fai galuega mamafa	• He is not allowed to work in taro pits, climb for coconuts, fish or do any hard work
• E mo ā e lavea me e iloa atu ia te ia e taua tele mo tana avaga	• Any disagreements with his wife must be kept private
• Kafai e hē ai he amiga, ke hē kai valevale i fale o tino	• He should not eat in other peoples' houses, unless formally invited
• Ke fakatulaga faka lelei a te olo valevale o tino ki tona fale	• Visits by people to the high chief must be arranged in advance

Pona	Faults (Pona)
------	---------------

E pelā ailoa mo te fuamua o te fuifala, kolā e huamakini kae malie atu i te kamata ilō mo mea ake, me ko ia muamua e leleu, a te tino e noho i te tofiga o te pulefenua, a ia e tatau o fakapiki kae e tautali ki luga i tulāfono e faifaiga mo tū.	Just like the first fruits of the pandanus cluster, which are sweeter and tastier than other segments because they ripen first, a person filling the role of High Chief must adhere to ideal rules of behavior. Having negative qualities (pona) disqualifies a person from holding this office.
A te Kau Aliko ni fono i te pō 27 Okatopa, 2003 kae ni fai he talatalaga i a pono. Konei a pona ni laulau mai gina e te maga Te Aliko a Muli, kae ni talia hoki e maga ake:	The Council of Chiefs met on October 27, 2003 to discuss what should officially be specified as a fault. The following list had previously been put forward by the chiefly branch Te Aliko a Muli, and the other chiefly branches approved it:
• Ko ia telā e hē ai he ana tama fakatōhala	• He should not have any illegitimate children
• Ko ia telā e hē āvaga ki he fuaitai	• He should not be married to a non-Nanumean
• Noho 'lei mo ona kāiga	• He must be on good terms with his family
• Noho 'lei mo tāgata o te fenua	• He must be on good terms with the community
• Aga tonu ki tona fenua	• He must demonstrate community-mindedness
• Fai mea tonu ki tona fenua	• He must have complied with island/community requests
• Ko te āvaga a te tagata telā e faka hopo e hē 'tau o i ai he ana tama fakatōhala	• The wife of the person selected must not have any illegitimate children
• Ko ia telā e fakahopo e hē he tino lotu i he talitonuga fakaatea — e tatau he tino mai te EKT	• He must be a member of the Tuvalu Christian Church (EKT)
• Ko ia telā e hē ai ni ana hala i te Mālō (kaiā, tā tino, me hala lahi e falepuipui ai)	• He must not have any major criminal convictions carrying a prison sentence of a year or more

Fakahopoga o te Pulefenua	Installation of a High Chief
---------------------------	------------------------------

A te fakahopoga o te pulefenua fou, e fai mana fai: koa mate a te pulefenua hopo me ko te fenua koa hē fialia ki ai me ko ana faiga e hē tonu. Ko te Aliko o te Tai (ko Tūmau) koa pule e ia a te filiga o he pulefenua	Installation of a new High Chief takes place as a result of the death of the previous reigning Chief or when the island is no longer satisfied with a reigning Chief because of inappropriate behaviors. Traditionally, the Tūmau branch convenes the chiefly branches to talk
---	--

fou. E luluku e ia a maga aliki katoa, koa tavivili i ai a lātou e uiga mo he pulefenua.	about the situation and organizes the selection process.
Koa teuteu i ai fakalakei a te pulefenua-fakahopo e ona kāiga fāfine ki mea konei: he hulu fou, lava fou, titi mo te kahoa galegale, fau mo titi vao ni tutu kae fakamanogi ki ponuonu. Fakatahi atu ki ona teuga konā ko te iloga o te pulefenua telā ko te kahoa — e i ai ni ata o te Kahoa i te website www.nanumea.net.	The High Chief-to-be is adorned by his female relatives with: new hulu, new shirt, skirt and necklace of galegale, head wreath and leaf skirt that have been perfumed with ponuonu, together with the identifying symbol of the High Chief — the Kahoa necklace. (See photos of the Kahoa at www.nanumea.net under Mea Tāua.)
Koa noho nei a te pulefenua-fakahopo i tena nohoaga, ko te mea ailoa koa fakatoka a te kāiga telā e māhani ailoa o kamata ki te fakafetai. A te kau aliki e noho i te feitu ki Haumaefa, kae ko tino o te fenua e noho mai i te feitu ki Lolua. Tafa atu nei ko te tulaga o meakai kolā ni pōi mo ika kolā ni fakatokagina e te kau aliki — e tufa katoa a meakai cone i te fenua.	Once the High Chief is seated on his dais, lunch is served, preceded by grace. The members of the chiefly group sit on the Haumaefa side, while the community is on the Lolua side. Food, poi and fish prepared by the chiefly group, is then distributed to the community.
Po o te Taumalo	The Day of the Taumalo
Ko te lua tenā o pō o fakafiafiaga o te fakahopoga o te pulefenua. A te taumalo ko te kautama telā koa katoa i ai olotou taki 16 tauhaga, ko lātou kolā koa tatau o fai olotou malo. Koa faitaugina hoki a lātou pelā me ni tāgata kolā koa mafai o fai a mea a tāgata i feitu pelā mo galuega faka te fenua, tausiga o kāiga, ke oko hoki ailoa ki taua.	This is the second day of the installation of the High Chief. The Taumalo is the generation of young men who have reached the age of about sixteen — an age at which they should wear a malo, loincloth. They are considered mature and are counted as men, able to be involved in men's activities such as community work, care of their family, and going to war.
E pā te kalaga i maga auala o te fenua, ko tāgata katoa ailoa o te fenua ke oti ake ki uta i te āhiga me koa fai te pō o te taumalo. Ko ia telā koa fai mo takitaki o te pō nei, e fakaholo e ia a vaega meakai kolā e fakaaogā i te faiga o te tahaoga tenei. Kae fai pelā koa toka lelei, koa kalaga i ai a te takitaki: 'A tatou koa kāmata o kai...'	A cry rings out along the village roads that all men of the island should come to the āhiga. The day's chosen leader announces the traditional food items to be used. When everything is ready, the leader calls out: 'Let's start eating!' Everyone starts to eat his shell of food. Then the cry: 'Let's exchange!' — and everyone runs to sit at another man's place and begins eating there.
Fakalavelave Fakamuli mo Sāvai mai te Mālō	Recent Difficulties and Government Delegations
I te tauhaga e 1985 ni fakaaogā e Nanumea a te avanoaga tenei o toe fakafoki mai te tulaga pulepule faka tū mo faifaiga. Te tofiga pulepule tenei ni fakaioga ko te pulefenua kae galue fakatahi mo te tulaga fou, tela e igoa ko te tukumuna me ko te tino 'tavili.' A te pulefenua ni fakamateagina pelā ko ia ko te piho fakahopogina o te mālō faka fenua i luga i Nanumea.	In 1985 Nanumea took the opportunity to reinstate its traditional chieftainship. This leadership role was given the name of Pulefenua and partnered with a new position, the Tukumuna or 'speaker.' The Pulefenua is recognized as the official head of local government in Nanumea.
I loto i te sefulu tauhaga koa olo atu, a te fakanohoga o te fakatau hē loto malilie o te fenua e uiga mo te tulaga ko te Pulefenua, ni auala ai o noho mavaevae i ai a te fenua, te loto tahi hoki o te fenua koa 'galo. E pelā e lua ailoa uiga ni māfua i ai o tupu a te fakatau hē lotomalie tenei.	In the period from 1994-2003, a series of unfortunate disagreements about the Pulefenua position have split the Nanumean community and destroyed its unity. Two factors seem to have been mainly responsible for creating a context in which these disagreements developed.
Tahi o mea ko te faka hē aiga o pulepulega faka faifaiga o te fenua, mo te fakatelega ailoa o te fenua e	One key factor is the destruction of traditional leadership positions and community autonomy during ia ailoa i he leva pelā he senitenali i taimi o te pulega faka kolone mo te taimi koa fakatū i ai misionale. Te lua o mea (uiga) ko te hē lava o te fakamainaga, pelā ke faka iloa tonu a te Tulāfono a te Falekaupule.

the past century of colonial control and missionization. The second factor concerns the lack of specificity of the Falekaupule Act itself, which left relationships among components of Nanumea's traditional leadership structure unspecified.

A te lua o savali mai te mālō o te atufenua ni fano hoki i te māhina o Mē 1999. I te feagaiga ni sainagaina e Noa Monise mo Sitia lakopo i te po 17 Mē 1999, ni fakatau lotomalie a putukauga konei e lua ke fakamalōlō a takitaki konei tokolua kae ke toe hahala te maga Tūmau he pulefenua fou, i fakatokaga kolā ni taliagina i te feagaiga.

The second delegation was sent by the government in May 1999. In the agreement signed by Noa Monise and Sitia lakopo on 17 May 1999, the two factions willingly accepted that the two leaders would step down and that a new Pulefenua would be selected by the chiefly branch Tūmau under provisions specified in the document.

Faualeiaga o Taimi Fuifai

Overcoming Difficult Times

E 'tou ailoa me i te olaga o Nanumea e i ai taimi o loto gātahi o kautama o tino o te fenua, kae koa i ai hoki mamimiliga mo taimi o pepeuga mo fifiga lalahi. Ko mea konā ni vaega o takapiliga o te natula mo olaga o fakapotopotoga i te lalolagi. E iloa hoki e tātou i tino o te fenua ko Nanumea ni umeke 'kī ailoa ke hahao mai mafuliga e uke o te 150 tauhaga koa olo.

We know that times of great community solidarity have alternated in the history of Nanumea with times of intense argument. Both conditions are part of the natural cycle in community life throughout the world. We also know that the community of Nanumea has managed to survive the many changes of the last 150 years.

A fakalavelave kolā e malahia ai a tino o te fenua ko Nanumea e hē mautuki ailoa ki te hē gata mai. A tātou katoa e tatau o fai a mea katoa kolā e maua e tātou, o fakagalo a manatu konei e finau tātou ki ai, kae ke tūmau a te olaga maopoopo telā e fākigina e te loto gatahi, noho lei, mo atiakega. E tonu, konā a manatu o 'tou tupuga, kae konā hoki a mea e tatau mo 'tou gātama.

The troubles, fakalavelave, that have recently plagued the community of Nanumea will certainly not last forever. We must all do all that we can to move beyond these recent issues and regain a community life that is characterized by unity, peace, and high accomplishment. Surely, that is what our ancestors would wish, and that is also what our children need.